MESSAGE FROM CHIEF EDITOR

Firstly, a very big thanks to all the supporters of the recent "Empress Wu – The Musical" performance held on 29 September 2012. It was with your support that we managed to raise RM104,000. This money will be used to subsidize the dialysis treatment of our poor kidney failure patients.

In this issue, we also highlight another successful event, the "Annual Dialysis Meeting 2012". A total of 600 delegates from the government and private hospitals attended this event that was led by several leading Nephrologists in Malaysia.

We are also vigorously promoting our "Coins for Hope", a coin-box project where you can adopt a coin box at RM 25 each and then once the coin box is full, help us to deposit the coins into our CIMB back account. You may take this opportunity to leverage on this coin-box and teach your kids the culture of saving money.

We are also happy to share with you the latest statistics on organ donation in Malaysia. We hope that this article will be an eye opener for you and that you will be motivated to pledge to become an organ donor, if you have not already done so.

I take this opportunity to wish all our readers, donors and supporters "Merry Christmas" and "Happy New Year". All the best for a wonderful 2013.

Thank you.

Dr Prasad Menon

The Will to Go On

“Don’t worry, remember me and I give you the power to live on,” said M. Sababathy who quoted his late wife, whom he claimed had visited him in his dreams and given him the encouragement to go on with his life. “It is by remembering her that I stay strong and look forward to life.”

M. Sababathy (60 years old) found out he has hypertension and diabetes in July 2007, when he fainted at the workplace one day. For an arduous 28 years, he worked as a senior dispatch clerk with Sunway Group – until his life took a turn for the worst.

“Don’t worry, remember me and I give you the power to live on,”

“I had to go for medical check-ups. At one time, my medication bills for diabetes, cholesterol, and hypertension cost me RM1,600.00 a month!” recalled Sababathy during interview. “After some time, I stopped taking the medications due to work stress. I just forgot about them.”

It wasn’t long until Sababathy started experiencing pains and dizziness at work – he couldn’t bring himself to eat properly and he felt nauseated all the time. Then he resolved to eating paracetamols and candies as a shortcut to relieve his discomfort.

“My late wife used to tell me that ‘God, whatever He gives – we take’;

A year later, a trip to the doctors’ told him that his kidneys had failed and, “I have to go on dialysis then.”

“My late wife used to tell me that ‘God, whatever He gives – we take’; she offered to donate her kidney to me but unfortunately the tests and cross matching came back unfavourable. Yet she had been taking good care of me since.”

Today, Sababathy learns to walk on prosthetic legs after both of his legs were amputated.

“It was the diabetes – a thumb tack was found lodged into my foot and the wound never healed. Later on it was the gangrene that caused the amputation. Still, I am grateful that my late wife never gave up on me till the end when she passed away suddenly due to heart problems.”

“No more smoking and drinking for me,” said Sababathy as he shook his head. “I cut down on sugar intake too. Now I tell others to keep taking their medications regularly.

Whatever the doctors say – you listen; don’t try to be your own doctor!”

Dialysis Diet: Fruits for Thought

Some 'eat to live'; others 'live to eat.'

Eating is something much celebrated, especially in a food haven like Malaysia. Eating – plays a vital role in our daily life, and dialysis patients should not be deprived of the joy of eating. Although dialysis patients should adhere to certain food restrictions, they could opt for food choices which are more suitable and their diet intake in maintaining their health.

What about the variety of fruits available – can dialysis patients 'eat all they can'? In the last issue of SHARE newsletter, we learnt that high potassium levels in blood tends to lead to other complications such as body weakness, muscle cramps, breathing difficulty as well as irregular heartbeat. Thus, fruits with high potassium levels should also be avoided.

However, there are fruits that can fit into the dialysis diet.

Pineapples, rich in Vit C!

Pineapple fits a low potassium diet with 125mg potassium for $\frac{3}{4}$ cup of serving. Pineapples have very low levels of sodium and phosphorus, but rich in vitamin C and provides 1 gram of fiber per serving. The good news is - it is fat-free, contain less than 1 gram of protein and around 15 grams of carbohydrates per serving!

Guavas, plentiful fiber!

One whole guava contains around 100mg of potassium. It is also very high in fiber content and rich in vitamin C. When eating guava, it is better to peel-off the skin; eat them plain without any 'Assam buoy'. Adding in 'Assam buoy' will increase the potassium content to a whopping 240mg!

Watermelons, careful with the excess fluids!

Watermelon is also allowed in a dialysis diet. Some are told to avoid watermelon, while some say it is acceptable in the dialysis diet. Thus, why the mixed message? Can a dialysis patient eat watermelon – or not?

Yes, watermelon is acceptable in the dialysis diet; in fact, the fruit has low levels of potassium – but we must control the portion size and fluid levels.

Watermelon is low in potassium, with around 120mg for a one cup of serving. However, watermelon contains a lot of fluid – the fruit is made up of 92 percent of fluid. For this reason, patients may exceed their fluid goals if they consume watermelon in large quantities. For dialysis patients on fluid restriction, watermelon is to be limited to only one cup per day. For dialysis patient with *interdialytic weight gain concerns, watermelon should be counted as a replacement for fluid.

To sum up, dialysis patients should eat fruits which are suitable for them; at the same time keeping an eye on the portion size. We should understand and learn about fruit restriction so that we can offer our support to our dialysis patients and not neglect them.

*interdialytic weight gain: amount of weight gain in between dialysis session; example if on Monday after dialysis patient weighs 60kg and Wednesday before dialysis patient weighs 64kg, that is 4kg of interdialytic weight gain

Fruits with High Potassium levels:-
Bananas/ Oranges/ Durian/ Kiwi/
Langsat/ Mata Kucing etc

Organ Donation Drive in Malaysia

According to the statistics from National Transplant Resource Centre (NTRC),

- Do you know that there are only 378 actual donors in Malaysia since 1970s?
- Do you know that the total amount of organ donor pledgers is less than 1% of the nation's population?
- Do you know that a donor who donates 2 kidneys can save 4 lives? (2 for receiving the kidneys; 2 more because now they have a place at the vacated slot in dialysis centres)
- Do you know when someone donates a heart, lung or liver; 3 or 4 more people may get a chance to live longer?
- Do you know with eye donation, you can save 2 blind men with a damaged cornea?
- Do you know with bone donation, 20 or 30 lives can be improved for those who need a bone graft transfer?
- Do you know with skin donation, the damaged skin from burnt patients can be replaced?

You may not know about the life-saving impact of Organ Donation in the past;

But now you are more aware of this life-changing altruistic act!

Pledge to be an Organ Donor now!!

The National Transplant Resource Centre has launched the NEW organ donation pledge cards! For more information on organ donation and how to pledge to be an organ donor, call the toll free number at 1-800-88-9080 today!

Resounding Success “Empress Wu – The Musical”

Thanks to the valuable and sole sponsorship from Loh and Loh Corporation Berhad and its group of companies, and the resounding support from our donors, supporters, associates, vendors, and partners, we had raised some RM104,000 from the recently concluded Empress Wu – The Musical on 29 September 2012.

Produced by the renowned Dama Orchestra, Empress Wu – The Musical played to an almost capacity-crowd at the Kuala Lumpur Performance Art Centre when the National Kidney Foundation of Malaysia hosted the performance.

The musical was based on the life and times of the first and only female emperor in the history of China – a visionary, a nation builder, a tyrant, and the symbol of ultimate female defiance in Confucian China.

Speaking to the audience prior to the beginning of the performance, Chairman of NKF’s Fundraising Committee, Mr Leong Yeng Kit thanked the audience, particularly Mr Jason Loh, managing director of Loh and Loh Corporation Berhad, who is also an ardent fan of Dama Orchestra’s performances, for their strong support towards NKF.

Mr Leong said the funds received from the project would certainly help ease the burden of our patients as well as to give them a better quality of life.
